It includes 19 independent countries along with the European Union. G-7 The G-20 includes all of the original members of the G-7 along with BRIMCKS (Brazil, Russia, India, Mexico, China, South Korea, and South Africa), and Australia, Argentina, Indonesia, Saudi Arabia, and Turkey. According to the G-20 website, "The economies that make up the G20 represent almost 90% of global GDP and two thirds of the world's population." 1. Argentina2. Australia3. Brazil4. Canada5. China6. One year later, the finance ministers and central bankers of the most important global economies convened in Berlin, Germany, at a meeting co-sponsored by the finance minister of Canada and the finance minister of Germany. In the wake of the international financial crisis that erupted in 2008, the most serious since the Great Depression (1929), the G20 began to meet at a Leaders' level and has since become the most important forum for global economic and financial cooperation and discussion." "The G20 is an informal forum for discussion between advanced and emerging countries that seeks to strengthen international cooperation and ensure global economic stability... Its main goals are to coordinate macroeconomic policies to strengthen the global economic recovery; to reshape the international financial architecture; and to promote financial regulations to help prevent another crisis, such as the one in 2008, from occurring again." developing countries Wikipedia. | NewsNov 26, 2019See all 19 photosAnybody can drive a new or classic Mercedes-Benz Geländewagen—if you can afford one. The boxy and iconic Benz has been available for more than four decades—only receiving its first full redesign for 2019—but only select G-wagens can be airlifted by a helicopter via built-in hooks. Those include the "Wolf" military-spec models, such as the 1991 250GD featured here.This particular rig is now known as the "White Wolf" and was restored and upgraded by Expedition Motor Company (EMC), a New Jersey-based company that specializes in restoring decommissioned 1990-1993 two-door/cabriolet 250GD Wolf G-wagens.See all 19 photosThe shop spent more than 1,000 hours to completely overhaul this Wolf, with the result finished in M-B original white paint and sporting an EMC-signature black convertible soft top. The company's complete frame-off restoration of course returns the vehicle to like-new condition, but it also adds plenty of modern comforts, such as ice-cold A/C for excursions both on and off the beaten path. The White Wolf has a G-wagen-spec fold-down windshield and EMC bumpers, as well as upgraded LED headlamps, a set of fender-mounted turn indicators with guards, a snorkel kit, Eibach springs, Bilstein monotube shocks, and BFGoodrich All-Terrain T/A rubber. There's also a jerry-can holder with black canister we'd recommend making use of if you plan to be gone a while. The aforementioned airlift hooks were also bolstered by "interior steel reinforcements per the original configuration" according to EMC.Per the G's original badge, the engine bay houses a Mercedes OM602 2.5-liter inline-five diesel that's been completely rebuilt per EMC's usual specs, and which is mated to a five-speed manual transmission. The White Wolf's transfer case and locking differentials were also rebuilt.The cabin has been outfitted with $2,150 in options, including marine-grade brown vinyl upholstery on the seats and front door cards, oak panels on the cargo floor and sides, and fancy diamond-pattern floor mats from EMC in the footwells. A period-look VDO Bluetooth audio setup, Vintage Air climate control, USB ports, and a hidden Retro Antenna system are also part of the package.If you don't want a ragtop Wolf-wagen, the company says it will also build a hardtop version, but plan on dropping at least $90,000 for the privilege—that's EMC's starting price for its exquisitely restored G's.See all 19 photosShare on FacebookShare on Twitter As the world reopens, G Adventures has launched a more flexible booking policy for those ready to travel.The Book With Confidence program enables travelers to rebook their itineraries up to two weeks before they travel. The new policy starts with bookings made July 1, 2021, and after.ADVERTISINGG Adventures is ready to welcome travelers back. The tour operator has been operating limited departures in several destinations since September 2020, and now welcomes Ecuador, Jordan, Portugal, South Africa and Spain to its list of 165 trip departures in July. Currently, travel with G is available in these countries as well as Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Egypt, Greece, Iceland, Mexico, Montenegro, Morocco, Tanzania and Turkey.Travelers will also be able to enjoy the newly announced Inca Trail departures in Peru. The trail will be running at 50 percent capacity starting August 7, 2021, meaning groups will have no more than eight travelers on each departure.G Adventures managing director Ben Perlo hopes the more relaxed booking policy will encourage travelers to secure departures."We've seen a welcome increase in bookings and search interest in the past two weeks, and we expect this to continue as customer confidence returns and pent-up demand for long-awaited vacations is realized," said Perlo. "We also know our travelers are looking for more active trips and bucket-list adventures, so being able to bring back the Inca Trail with more booking flexibility is ideal. Travelers keen to do this hike will want to be quick to secure their permits to enjoy the Inca trail while it operates at half the standard capacity."Perlo also noted that G Adventures believes demand is going to be increasing."At G Adventures we have been running trips since September 2020, so as soon as travelers are ready to book, we are ready to take them on a life-changing adventure," he said. "We anticipate demand is going to return very fast from this point forward, so if travelers want to take a trip, and know when they want to go, now is the time to lock in those dates while supply is there." Media Platforms Design TeamThe Internet is abuzz about a new study that looked at whether there was a genetic link to the G Spot. The study of more than 1800 female twins didn't find women's reports of having a G Spot to be more common among identical twins as would be expected if there was a genetic basis for the G Spot. Well, at least that was the idea. The trouble, however, is that the study had some pretty important limitations. They asked if women "believed" they had - and I quote - "a so-called G Spot" and gave a pretty precise definition for what they meant ("a small area the size of a 20p coin on the front wall of the vagina that is sensitive to deep pressure").The trouble is that no one knows if this is a valid way of measuring the existence of the G Spot. Some women may have said that "yes", they believe they have a G Spot because don't all women? Or they may have said "no" if they had heard that it was a myth. Or maybe they would have said "no" if they enjoyed stimulation of the front wall of the vagina but felt like it was a larger area that felt good, not something so small.So, we don't really know what this adds to our understanding of the G Spot or not. What we do know is that women experience pleasure (and sometimes orgasm) in different ways. Some women have never had an orgasm. Nearly all women are probably capable of orgasm but that doesn't mean they will ever have one. Or that they will have them with certain partners or from certain types of sex play. Things such as stress, poor body image, relationship problems, performance anxiety or negative genital self-image can get in the way of women's orgasm.Feeling relaxed, learning to masturbate and finding out what feels good can help a woman to orgasm as can having a partner who wants to please a woman and is open to feedback and creative ideas. In your own sex life, then, I'd encourage you to learn to play together, to explore, to try new things, to open up to each other and to sometimes revisit old things that you haven't done in a while (have sex in a car? in the shower? make out on the couch?). Oh, and if you're wondering? I chose to post a picture of a banana as the front wall of a woman's vagina can often be more easily stimulated with a curved sex toy, curved fingers (as with the "come here" movement) or - anecdotally - maybe even with a curved penis.
